Safety-Critical Systems: The Convergence of High Tech and Human Factors Felix Redmill 2012-12-06

Safety-critical systems, in the sense of software-based systems used in safety critical applications, are 'high-tech'. They are products of modern technology. Their effective, efficient and safe functioning depends not only on the development of the right technologies but also on the right use of them. The safety of a system may be compromised not only by faults in the system but also by the use in the first place of an unreliable, unsafe, or unproved technology in its development. The key to the development and use of both technologies and systems is the human being. Until recently, the importance of human involvement, other than at the direct operational level, was hardly admitted. But now the unreliability of humans is recognised, as is the potential for latent faults to be introduced into systems at any point in their life cycles, by all who are involved with them, including designers and strategic decision makers.

De vergissing van Descartes Antonio Damasio 2019-01-18 In zijn bestseller 'De vergissing van Descartes' zet Antonio Damasio zich af tegen Descartes' opvatting dat lichaam en geest twee verschillende, van elkaar gescheiden aspecten van de mens zouden zijn. Lichaam en geest zijn juist onlosmakelijk verbonden. Damasio put uit zijn ervaringen met patiënten met hersenschade om te laten zien welke rol de emoties spelen bij de vorming van ons wereldbeeld. Een herdruk ter gelegenheid van Antonio Damasio's nieuwe boek, 'De vreemde orde der dingen', waarin hij laat zien hoe emotie en gevoel bepalend zijn voor de menselijke cultuur.
